Annual Report, 2018-19
The Center for Historic Preservation
Middle Tennessee State University

August 23, 2019
Origins and Background

The Center for Historic Preservation at Middle Tennessee State University was established in 1984 as the university’s first Center of Excellence and one of the nine original centers at the state’s universities administered by the Tennessee Board of Regents. In 1989, the Center received accomplished center status and two years later became a full-time research and public service institute. One of the Center’s very first programs, the Tennessee Century Farms program, began as a partnership with the Tennessee Department of Agriculture in 1985 and continues more than thirty years later.

In 2001, the Center became the administrator of the Tennessee Civil War National Heritage Area, a partnership unit of the National Park Service. Since then, Heritage Area staff and students have worked seamlessly within the Center to enhance the effectiveness of statewide Civil War interpretation, preservation, education, and heritage tourism efforts. In 2008, the Center began to administer the Library of Congress’s Teaching with Primary Sources program in the state of Tennessee. The program has established itself as a leader in providing hands-on workshops and in-depth online resources for teachers across the state. In 2012, the Center began partnering with the National Trails Intermountain Region of the National Park Service to identify and document historic buildings associated with the Trail of Tears National Historic Trail. This partnership was extended in 2017 to include the Santa Fe Trail. The national trails projects regularly take CHP faculty, staff and graduate students to protects throughout Tennessee and the surrounding states extending to Santa Fe, New Mexico.

We aggressively pursue our mission of training the next generation in the skills they need to compete for jobs nationally and to place students into impactful careers. To achieve this mission, we join with communities to interpret and promote their heritage assets through education, research, and preservation. Key to our pursuit of this mission are our MTSU graduate and undergraduate research assistants as well as other MTSU students who take historic preservation classes taught by Center faculty. Together with our many institutional and community partners we have made 2018-2019 a productive and impactful year. We now want to share several of our major accomplishments.
2018-2019 Highlights

This past academic year may have been the busiest in the Center’s long history. Its faculty, staff, and graduate students took on not only the typical wide range of field projects in Tennessee communities, they accepted the challenge of developing a comprehensive study of Historic Black Colleges and Universities for Alabama, a heritage development plan for a historic house on the Santa Fe Trail outside of Kansas City, and to plan and host a major national conference at the MTSU campus.

The national conference was the Slave Dwelling Project Conference, funded by the Tennessee Civil War National Heritage Area (see below). This gathering attracted over 200 attendees interested in preserving slave buildings and telling the stories of the enslaved. The Heritage Area’s support reflected the theme of “Civil War to Civil Rights” of the National Park Service. Prior conferences had been held at the University of Virginia, University of South Carolina, and Savannah College of Art and Design. Center faculty, staff, and graduate students presented and moderated sessions. The conference at MTSU began with a pre-event, arranged and co-sponsored by the Albert Gore Sr. Research Center, that addressed the role of black students in campus activism in 1968.

Center faculty and staff also worked closely in the fall of 2018 with the Tennessee State Museum and the Museum of Early Southern Decorative Arts to plan and host a major Tennessee-focused decorative arts conference at the new facility, a week prior to the Slave Dwelling Project Conference. Later, faculty and staff worked with the museum on a tour of major collections, such as Newport’s Cocke County Museum, as planning for a nationally acclaimed quilt exhibit that opened at the new museum in February 2019.
The Center continued its sponsorship of the Tennessee Woman Suffrage Centennial Collaborative, with the 2019 symposium held at Memphis’ Pink Palace Museum. We will sponsor two MTSU events in 2020 to mark this important anniversary. The Center also closed its efforts for the Centennial of World War I by producing a historic preservation plan for the York Bible School, part of the Alvin C. York State Park in Fentress County.

Fentress County, like previously mentioned Cocke County, is among the 15 distressed rural counties that Gov. Bill Lee has ordered state agencies to shift attention to. Led by Fieldwork Coordinator Savannah Grandey and Center director Carroll Van West, the Center has addressed the governor’s directive with multiple projects in rural Tennessee.

In Middle Tennessee, Grundy County is another distressed county. Officials there asked the Center to prepare a preservation assessment and suggested avenues for needed repair work at the historic Coalmont Public Library. This Craftsman-style landmark, listed in the National Register of Historic Places, holds significant heritage tourism potential for the community. Center faculty and staff, working with graduate students from the MTSU Public history program, prepared the report over the fall and winter.

In Decatur County, West Tennessee, a similar team of CHP staff and students carried out a Heritage Development Plan for the historic Crawford School, later a church, in Decatur County in an effort supported by local government and other groups.
Citizens who participated in the Dunbar Rosenwald School workshop, Loudon

In Loudon County, East Tennessee, Center faculty, staff, and graduate assistants worked with the local African American community and city officials to bring a new assessment for the preservation and use of the Dunbar Rosenwald School, which the Center had earlier placed in the National Register in 2008.

In Middle Tennessee, Center faculty, staff, and graduate students prepared a heritage plan for a historic black church, Frierson Chapel, in Coopertown, Robertson County. They also worked with the state development district to prepare its National Register nomination. The City of Coopertown owns the property and hopes to use it for community events and commemorations. Graduate students Quinlan Odom, Jessica Smyth, and Sarah Williams won a MTSU award for their research poster. Graduate students also contributed to the heritage plans for Ward Rosenwald School in Hartsville, Trousdale County and the Townsend Rosenwald School in Winchester, Franklin County. All three projects are moving forward.

Establishing National Models in Historic Preservation

As the rural Tennessee projects demonstrate, the Center prides itself in preparing MTSU students to gain the experience they need to work in all sorts of professional opportunities. Student engagement and success are always at the forefront of our planning for community outreach projects. Graduate assistants from the Center are consistently nationally competitive and work for history and design firms; state and local governments; federal agencies, non-profit organizations, and colleges and universities.

In 2018-2019, the Center continued its national leadership in best practices through field projects, reports and conference sessions on nationally significant issues. For example, the Center completed a draft historic assessment of the Owens-McCoy House, a significant property on the Santa Fe Trail in Independence, Missouri. This plan, to be completed later in 2019, will hopefully lead to the creation of a new historic site to tell the compelling stories of westward expansion, settlement, race, and economic opportunity along the Santa Fe Trail.

Led by project director Amy Kostine, the Center completed a GIS data base of properties on the Santa Fe National Historic Trail in Missouri. The Center also was one of twelve university units, selected in a national competition, to be awarded a new cooperative agreement to continue its historic preservation and cultural resource management work in support of various units and programs of the National Park Service.

At the time of the agreement, the Center, led by Visiting Research Professor Dr. Tiffany Momon, was finishing its study and survey of eight Historic Black Colleges and Universities in Alabama for the Alabama Historical Commission and National Park Service. It included a statewide National Register thematic nomination, two new or revised and expanded nominations, surveys of eight campuses (300 buildings), and a historic resource study of the nationally significant Savery Library at Talladega College.

Work on the Trail of Tears National Historic Trail continued, with a focus on the river routes of the Trail, including the Tennessee, Ohio, and Mississippi rivers. The National Park Service had earlier funded interpretive kiosks at locations such as New Madrid, Missouri, across from Tennessee. We hope that potential sites in Tennessee, such as a public park outside of Tiptonville, can be similarly developed to create new opportunity for heritage tourism in Lake County, another of the 15 distressed counties.

The culmination of a ten-year partnership with the Charleston-Calhoun historical society, the Cherokee Nation, the City of Charleston, the Cleveland/Bradley County Convention and Visitors Bureau, and the National Park Service happened in April 2019 with the opening of the new permanent exhibit at the Hiwassee River Heritage Center and the adjacent interpretive trail for the Trail of Tears in Charleston, Tennessee.

The Center and its graduate students designed, supported, and installed the exhibits, with the cooperation of the McClung Museum at the University of Tennessee and private donors who lent key artifacts for the exhibits. The Center also research, designed, and produced the interpretive markers along the heritage trail in Charleston.

Center faculty and staff also began consultations with Memphis’ National Civil Rights Museum, the National Park Service and its World Heritage Study initiative about a possible nomination of the Lorraine Motel as part of an internationally significant study of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. That effort continues into 2019-2020.

Center faculty and staff shared their results and approaches at various national conferences in 2018-2019. At the Organization of American Historians meeting in Philadelphia, Carroll Van West shared his research on the African American cemeteries in Macon County, Alabama, that are associated with the “Tuskegee Syphilis” study. He joined two former CHP graduate assistants, Dr. Torren Gaston and Dr. Tiffany Momon, at the annual Conference on Race and Reconciliation at the College of William and Mary, where they held the session, “Objects and Places: Telling the Truth and its Consequences.” Education coordinator Kira Duke presented a poster session at the National Council for Social Studies meeting in Chicago. Digital historian Dr. Susan Knowles presented the Center’s digital initiatives at conferences of the Society of Historical Archaeology in St. Louis and the National Council of Public History in Hartford, CT. Research Professor Dr. Stacey Graham reviewed several Center projects in the context of her training in medieval history at the Visions in Medieval Studies in North America conference at UCLA. The Center also supported research presentations from its graduate assistants at various state and regional conferences.

Providing Leadership for Tennessee’s Civil War Legacies

Over the past 18 years, the Tennessee Civil War National Heritage Area, which is housed at the Center for Historic Preservation, has become a go-to institution for communities, non-profit groups, government officials, and property owners who wish to join the Heritage Area’s efforts to “tell the whole story of America’s greatest challenge.”

In 2018-19, the Heritage Area continued its efforts to help the multiple partners in Franklin. Through the leadership of Federal Liaison Laura Holder, the Heritage Area supported efforts to install new interpretive signage, to develop the exhibits for the forthcoming battlefield visitor center, and participated in various public forums and events, such as new efforts to restore the town’s historic Masonic Lodge.

In Nashville, the Heritage Area is working with the Metro Historical Commission to develop state-of-the-art digital walking tours and driving tours of several Civil War-related areas of the downtown and greater Nashville area. These products will reach thousands of visitors and residents. Nashville Public Television also released its latest collaboration with the Heritage Area, a documentary about African American soldiers from the Civil War forward, as the Heritage Area continues to inform the “Civil War to Civil Rights” theme of the National Park Service. Heritage Area director Dr. Carroll Van West serves on the Fort Negley Preservation Advisory Board.

The Heritage Area also continues to work with Tennessee cities and towns to create new interpretive centers and heritage tourism opportunities. In East Tennessee, the Heritage Area worked with Bristol City Parks and the Friends of Steele Creek Park to study the feasibility of moving a historic log cabin, associated with Civil War veterans, for its use in heritage education and Tennessee history programs. In Chattanooga, the Heritage Area worked with multiple partners, especially the National Park Service, the American Battlefield Trust, and local heritage leaders, for the preservation of Brown Ferry Tavern. It also carried out a heritage plan for a former Union signal post in Hamilton County, the Conner Toll House, for the Land Trust of Tennessee.
In Rogersville, the Heritage Area began in 2019 studies of three different Civil War-related properties, at the request of the city, the local heritage association, and property owners: the Powel Law Office House, the Rogers Tavern, and the Amis House.

At Spring Hill, Middle Tennessee, the Heritage Area began a full research report and assessment of the larger Civil War and Reconstruction stories associated with Rippavilla Plantation and how this city historic site could take advantage of the adjacent Spring Hill battlefield. One of the earliest Heritage Area projects was placing Rippavilla in the National Register and the property was the site of one of the Heritage Area’s first regional workshops. This important study will be finished by year’s end.

In West Tennessee, a group of citizens and local officials in Michie, McNairy County, reached out to the Heritage Area for assistance in developing a driving tour of historic sites related to the Shiloh and Corinth campaign of 1862. This collaboration produced a full color tour brochure as its starting point, with a potential heritage center in the future, important heritage tourism products for one of the state’s 15 distressed counties.
A major multi-panel exhibit project for the historic Clay County Courthouse in Celina was also completed as a joint Civil War Heritage Area and Center project. Clay County is another of the targeted distressed counties of Tennessee.

Promoting best practices in cemetery preservation and interpretation has evolved into a major program of the Heritage Area. We regularly answer inquiries and conduct field visits and studies to help communities better preserve these properties as part of the legacies of the Civil War. Tennessee has a handful of national cemeteries, operated by the Veterans Administration, but most Tennessee soldiers were buried in local town, church, and fraternal lodge-sponsored cemeteries. Research Professor Dr. Stacey Graham and Programs Coordinator Dr. Lydia Simpson carried out projects in Smithville, Clarksville, and Knoxville in 2018-19.

A Tradition of Service to Tennessee Cities and Counties

The Center’s tradition of service to Tennessee agencies and communities never ends. In this decade, our work with Tennessee’s musical legacies continued with the successful National Register nominations of the Hank Snow House and Studio and the Carl Smith-June Carter House in Madison. Our assistance to farm families through the Tennessee Century Farms program never wavers. Assistant Director Dr. Antoinette van Zelm heads the program, using graduate students in the recording, research, and fieldwork about these special landscapes, touching all divisions of the state. Dr. van Zelm and Dr. Lydia Simpson also involved graduate assistants in their Partnership Projects for the Sitka School, a historic African American school, in Gibson County; a survey of the Athens historic district in McMinn County, a new heritage tourism walking tour and exhibit kiosks for Morristown; and an assessment of the Looney-Jackson House in Columbia. These. projects deepen MTSU students’ understanding of best practices in historic preservation. Moving students forward through interactions with Tennesseans and the places they value is the greatest legacy of the Center for Historic Preservation.

Dr. Susan W. Knowles collaborated with other MTSU departments to launch an invaluable digital study, the Places and Perspectives project, of African American historic sites in the counties of Greene, Hardeman (another of the 15 distressed counties), and Maury. Preservationists, scholars, and community activists across the state and nation have expressed interest in this online digital history project, with its grassroots community focus. Together with already launched digital humanities projects such as Southern Places and Trial, Triumph, and Transformation, Dr. Knowles, her graduate assistants, and many partners have built a solid platform for Center faculty, staff and students to contribute their research and share their sources to scholarly audiences across the globe.

Best Practices for Tennessee Educators

Teaching with Primary Sources at MTSU, a program funded by the Library of Congress and administered by the Center’s Research Professor Dr. Stacey Graham and Education Coordinator Kira Duke, continues to provide professional development that emphasizes the use of primary sources and historical thinking skills in standards-based K-12 classroom activities. Over the past year, TPS-MTSU offered Tennessee educators almost forty workshops and presentations on a variety of topics that ranged from early Tennessee history to the Civil Rights Movement. Events took place statewide, involving school districts and organizations such as the Green McAdoo Cultural Center (Clinton), the Albert Gore Research Center (MTSU), and Bristol’s Birthplace of Country Music Museum. The program also created newsletters, lesson plans, and primary source sets on diverse topics such as diplomacy, causes of the Great Depression, and Tennessee agriculture (all available at library.mtsu.edu/tps).

The program’s 2019 Summer Institute focused on the “Dawn of the Civil Rights Movement.” This theme explored the tactics of nonviolent protest and the formation of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, and the Freedom Rides. Dr. Cynthia Fleming of the University of Tennessee kicked off the three-day event at the Beck Cultural Center in Knoxville with scholarly context and personal memories of the time period. On the second day, we allowed teachers to explore such key East Tennessee locations as the Highlander Research and Education Center in New Market and Knoxville College, a historically black college in the city’s Mechanicsville neighborhood. East Tennessee Historical Society hosted the third day of the institute, during which teachers explored more primary sources and strategies and created their own lesson activities based on what they learned.

Other highlights of this past year include working with other state partners in preparing teachers for the new Tennessee History curriculum by co-hosting “Tennessee’s Story” workshops in Brownsville’s Dunbar Carver Museum, Gallatin’s Volunteer State Community College, and Jackson’s Jackson State Community College. We also held “Addressing Social Studies Practices Standards through Inquiry” workshops in Knoxville, Shelby County, Robertson County, Nashville, and Franklin. Teacher have been requesting training in the World War II and Cold War era. The program supported the “Cold War Veterans” lesson plan, created by Jennifer Lange of East Hickman [County] Intermediate School as well as presenting “Oral Histories and Historical Memory: The Experiences of Soldiers in the Second World War” at the Tennessee Council for the Social Studies conference in Gatlinburg. The TPS program gives MTSU students many opportunities. In 2018-219, graduate assistants Ethan Holden and Layla Smallwood developed lesson plans for “Tennessee Farmers and Tennessee’s Agriculture” and “The Clinton Twelve,” respectively.

The TPS program also stretched beyond the state boundaries to present a two-day workshop in partnership with the Ulysses S. Grant National Historic Site in St. Louis and give a poster session at a national education conference in Chicago. We hope to do more of these regional partnerships next year.
